BANNING, CALIFORNIA 92220

in spite of the clean-lined architecture against the rugged splendor of the San Geronio range, without the saving grace of humor as well as tradition, without people . . .

the emotional roller coaster; up one minute, down the next . . . spectators participate,
people become involved.

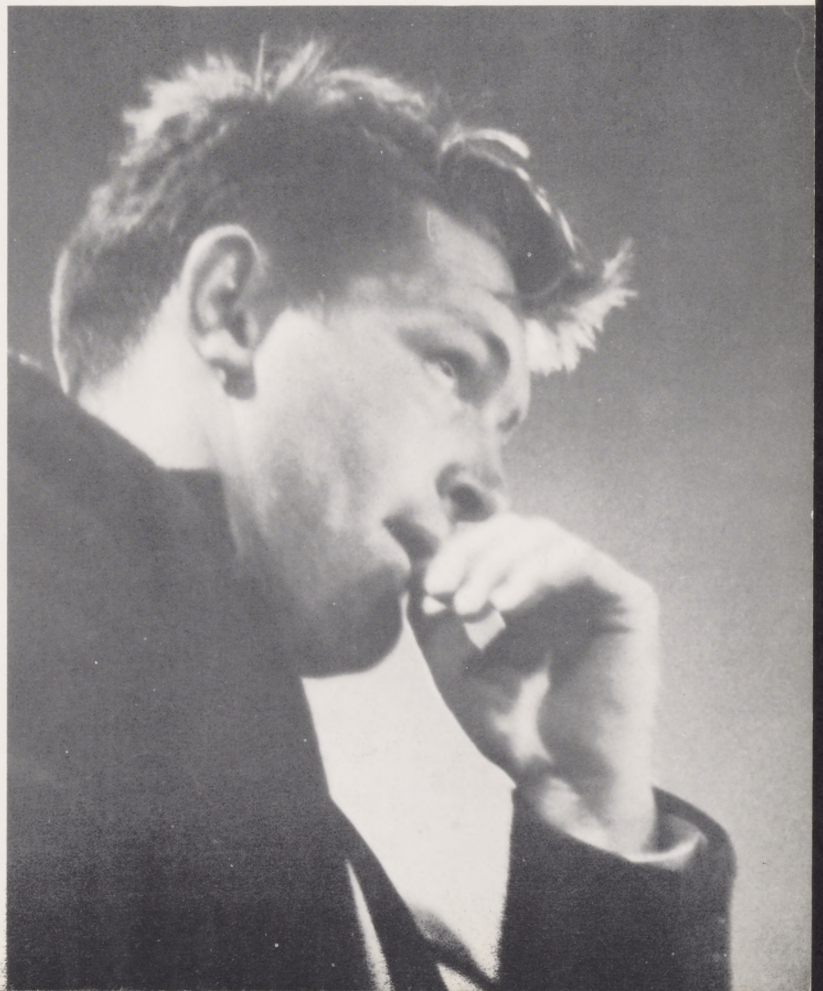

the watchers mirror the agony, Willie Lyons' ordeal cancels out the division between onlookers and actors . . .

as together they reflect the strain of sweating out the tough moments with Coach Linden.

the human values . . .

the grandeur that is home
can be an empty thing
without people . . .
without humanity
investing a yearbook with the intangibles that make meaningful the remembered acts, places, faces . . .
the little things,
the big ones . . .

the first snow of the season; splendor mixed up with slap-stick snow-balling . . .

The remembered acts aren't all momentous;
the roller-coaster recollections swing from grim to gay, and back again to the serious business of school - - - the random memory scrambles the inconsequential and important; but little things or big moments, the people stand out . . .

the looks exchanged at the Spinster's Dance . . .

or across the crowded class-room, are as important in retrospect . . .

as the pride-ful demonstrations for parents during Public Schools Week.

Play-acting can be a serious thing, too. Ann Potter's mien in the Senior play was as memorable and

as grimly determined as those of the championship caliber hoopsters listening to Coach Burk's admonitions . . .

and matched the serious intent of Virginia
Bauer in poster production.

From that grim determination, this sweet success; the cheers of the multitude heralded the high point of the season and Banning's basketball championship of the California Interscholastic Federation, small schools division . . .

But whether your big moment came in quiet concentration backstage, or under the showers fully dressed, in victory's after math . . .

... this inevitable involvement
with the seasons,
this rapid spin around the sun,
would dim the memory's recall;
still the institution lives in the people who made it . . .

... whether your concern was for the future,

or of the moment in time . . .

... this reasonable facsimile,
this paper memory, out of context, yet may serve nostalgia's whim to re-create the glory that was . . .

student council

The Student Council started the year off with a "Hi" Dance to get everyone acquainted and continued their expressed interest in student government and activities. A popular innovation was the showing of a noon movie which proved that good politicians are crowd pleasers.

Lady Judith Elliot, in attempting to sell her family manor house which dates back to the 15th century, runs into such obstacles as the disapproval of her four "dead, but not gone" ancestors; the attempted exorcism of the ancestors by her fiancé; and her own falling in love with the nephew of the woman who wants to buy Barnsley in order to prove to the world that psychic forces do exist.
